

MoneySense is an organization with a goal to see a better educated future generation. But we believe that to improve the education system, the education system itself must be changed to incorporate the type of curriculum that will truly help the students in their future. MoneySense is doing exactly that by becoming a part of the schools to educate the students about money sense. We develop and distribute both interactive print material and online material that includes a game to teach students how to spend, save, and avoid debt in a fun, intuitive way. It also includes a system similar to Quicken for students to learn how to track their money: their spending, saving, etc. Some might say that the best place for a system like this would be in struggling neighborhoods, but we believe that if we can expose all students to this, we will be able to create a better future for everybody. However, doing this will not only require resources to create the material, but a volunteer community that will be able to actually teach this in schools. By creating this community, we also give adults a chance to help the world, especially the students, positively. Our goal is to eventually expand this system to also help adults. After all, though these adults might not go to school anymore, they can always learn how to make their own life, as well as that of their families better by being aware of their monetary situation.
